Additional 2016 highlights include the title role in Xerxes in Berlin (Komische Oper) and Graz - garnering a nomination for the Austrian Music Theatre Award - along with Stephanie's debut at the Bayreuther Festspiele (Wellgunde/Waltraute/Second Norn).

Press:

"The outstanding performance of the afternoon was that of mezzo-soprano Stephanie Houtzeel in the role of Armide... At its best, her Armide seemed life itself, with its messy joys, sorrows, hungers and contradictions, and the role was sung with all the ardor, intelligence and vocal luster at Houtzeel's command, which was plenty. This was the sort of daring, impassioned performance that can make a career..."

"In the title role, Stephanie Houtzeel, a late substitution in the cast, enjoyed quite a triumph. The mezzo proved capable of effortless vocal power as well as the finest dynamic shadings. The richly stylish musicality was matched by terrific stage presence; her portrayal of the in-love-with-love Octavian could not have been more alive with personality."

"This performance will not be forgotten in years: Stephanie Houtzeel wavers and wanders around the stage as if she has elastic in her hips and knees—it is probably not a coincidence that her Xerxes imitates Johnny Depp's performance in 'The Pirates of the Caribbean.' Her Persian king is a braggart, a narcissistic superstar and a slightly degenerate aristocrat who likes to receive homage but finds amorous adventures a hundred times more captivating than any boring business of state or battle..."
